

SUDDEN START OF CAR KILLS YOUNG WOMAN

Maid's Neck Broken in Alighting at Lexington Avenue and Thirty-Seventh Street.

Nelson Borland, a broker, of No. 316 East Thirty-seventh street, and his butler, to-day identified the body of the young woman who broke her neck in alighting from a Lexington avenue car at Thirty-seventh street last night as that of his wife's maid, Nora Stephens, nineteen years old, one of the Irish beauties who came across in the Baltic.

Mr. Borland read in the morning papers of the accident, and at the instance of his wife, who was disturbed by her servant's absence, visited the Morgue. He gave instructions to have the body removed to an aunt's home at No. 561 Second avenue, the girl's only relative in America.

He stated that Miss Stephens had left the house yesterday afternoon to mail a Christmas present of $10 to her mother in Dublin, and to visit her aunt in Second avenue. She was returning when she met her death. As the car approached Thirty-seventh street she arose and walked to the rear. The conductor was in the front of the car and a passenger pulled the bell. The car slowed down almost to a stop, but as she stepped forward again the car started suddenly. She lost her balance and fell forward, landing headfirst on the pavement. She died on the way to Bellevue Hospital.
